Dear M. Langlois,

I have long been a fan of the Louvre and its wonderfully curated exhibits. With a lifelong passion for antiquities and my professional experience, I am positive that I could make a lasting impression on your storied institution.

In my current position as assistant curator for the Smithsonian's antiquities department, I have been instrumental in procuring several highly sought-after pieces. In addition, my reputation as a world-class authenticator of museum-quality pieces has only grown. I am certain that I am the best qualified candidate to oversee the Roman antiquities department.

I have a passion for history and its place in the modern world. With a gift for languages and an ability to identify with many cultures, I know that I can improve the Roman antiquities department as well as curate world-renowned exhibits. My resume speaks for itself.

I welcome the opportunity to speak with you and discuss how my past success can translate to continued, improved success for the world's premier museum.

Sincerely,

Diana Prince

P.S. If you're interested, during our conversation we can discuss the world-changing artifact I recently handled for the Smithsonian.
